Making Decisions

Think about:-

WHY you are doing this

WHO you are doing this for

WHICH aspect of your family's history, or which branch of the family, you will work on first

WHAT format you will choose (there are pros and cons of each)

Consider:- Cost, longevity, appeal to a particular audience, expertise required

Formats include:- Books or ebooks, Articles/short biographies, Websites or Blogs,

Videos, Power Point/Slide Shows, Displays, Various 'Outside the Box' methods

And WHAT you will include

Where you will start and stop?

Chronological or thematic?

Backwards or forwards?

Everything you know or the 'exciting bits'?

Overall theme?

Include research trail?

Faction?

Academic or popular?

WHEN you will do this

Set a realistic deadline and sub deadlines - Chapter 1 by x. Finish by y.

HOW you will organise your project

Collating Notes - Family Tree, List of characters, Biographies and Chronologies, Context.

Time line for each ancestor - add local and national events to personal timeline.

From start keep record of:- Sources - documentary, books, websites, people

Six Steps to Success

Task 1

Fill in the sheet at the end of this handout. Come to decision about starting and stopping points, what to include, approach and format. Begin a chronology (30-100 years - maybe for the life of one key person). At this stage, only include family information (born, married, died, when parents died, where living, occupation, children born - may want to include sources (suggest different colour or column for this). If you do this on a computer, perhaps as a spreadsheet, you will need to print it so you can see it when you are writing. Alternatively, it is possible to use split screens but this may mean it is difficult to get a complete overview..

Task 2

For one individual or generation, collect information under each of the national context and local context headings.

National:- Royalty, Politics, War, Religion, Science, The Arts, Special events

Local:- Terrain, Neighbours, Schools, Shops, Businesses, Farms, Fairs and Markets, Transport, Church, Pub, Weather, Local events.

Add events to your chronology.

Task 3

Find out about the occupation of one of your ancestors:- working conditions, tools, uniform, anything significant that occurred during your ancestors' lifetime.

Task 4

For one generation of your ancestors:-

Find out something that comes under each of the domestic life headings:-

Houses, furniture, clothing, food, prices and wages, illness and medicine.

Task 5

Find 6 illustrations of different types for your family's history.

Task 6

Start writing your family's history. Good luck!

Golden rules:-

Start small

Break the project down into manageable pieces

Making Decisions

What is my initial aim?

Why am I doing this?

Who are my target audience?

What format and content is most likely to appeal to my target audience?

What/Who am I focusing on?

What Format do I plan to use?

How am I going to arrange my family history?

Where am I starting and stopping?

Will my account be backwards or forwards?

Will I have a theme?

Am I including an account of the research - if so at what point?

Am I writing fact or fiction?

How academic do I want this to be?

What are my deadlines?

Overall?

Short term?
